As far as I have been able to observe ot one-fourth of the voters are in favor of the primary law, but it has been foisted upon us by politicians inordinately eager to get the reputation of being the friends of the people

The voters object to the two elections as taking unnecessary time, and do not like to pay taxes for the expense of the extra one, and realize that in a primary to choose from men with whom they are totally unacquainted, simply means that the result is governed by chance, with no assurance that the best men will be ominated.

In a country like ours political parties are necessary in order that certain policies of government shall be put in force by it on the officers elected by the people. The only correct basis for a political party is a platform of principles enunciated by the representatives of those who have affiliated under the party name. Any to whom these principles do not appeal have the right to align themselves with some other party. Any other plan is chaos, and personal platforms are puerile. ORLANDO TEFFT.
